He's best known as the lead technical architect of Quake and Doom, developer of classic PC game engines like Irrlicht and Radical. These days, Carmack is known for his work at Id Tech 5, the latest version of the Doom 3 id Tech 4 engine. In 2008, Carmack launched his company, Oculus VR, to create hardware and software solutions for virtual reality. In 2012, after successfully crowd-funding his vision for a virtual reality headset, Carmack began to work on id Tech 5. In the next year, id Tech 5 took the industry by storm, with gamers around the world playing Doom 3: BFG Edition, a drastically modified version of the game meant to take advantage of the Oculus Rift headset. The modifications made it even more realistic, with player movement, speed, and even the view available to the player, fully mimicking the game's original PC game engine.
