The MSSQL version is designed to be used ... from Microsoft (MSSQL, SQLEXPRESS, SQLEXPRESSLTD). All ... MSSQL includes all the standard functionality of ... MSSQL includes all of the standard functionality that can be provided in addition to that which is specific to the version of MS SQL Server to which it is intended. This means that a SQL Agent that is not included in MSSQL cannot be used to work with a SQL Server database to which MSSQL has not been installed. Because it is a database extension, it must also be intended to work with existing SQL Server instances. You can use the Transact-SQL Server SetupUtility function when connecting to these databases and creating, modifying, and deleting database objects. This function can cause problems if it is used to remove the SQL Server agent. If removing a SQL Server agent causes an error, the error may be due to the fact that the SetupUtility function does not call the SQL Server agent. If SQL Server agents are not installed on the server, the SetupUtility function may not call AgentManager. This occurs when a server with AgentManager running does not support the SetupUtility function. Note . The Microsoft SQL Server Agent service uses the TCP/IP protocol to work with SQL Server and can only be installed on the same computer and network as the SQL Server on which the SQL Server Agent service is running. Make sure that the SQL Server Agent service is already installed on the server. For more information about the SQL Server Agent service, see Installing and Configuring the SQL Agent If there is no SQL Server instance on the server, you must install an instance. Make sure that there is at least one processor on the computer. Multiple processors are required to install SQL Server. If there are other instances of SQL Server on the server, you must first remove all other instances. Make sure that the computer for the SQL Server instance has the latest version of SQL Server installed. Make sure that the SQL Server instance computer is not running the SQL Server service, server, or SQL Server instance. If the SQL Server service is running, you must stop it. Make sure that the computer for the SQL Server instance has the latest versions of the following components installed: SQL Server Reporting Services tool for viewing and printing reports. A management tool for SQL Server Management Studio. Command-line tool for deploying and executing SQL Server commands.
