Create new column with specific values using `dplyr::case_when` I have a DF with two columns: df % mutate( NEW_COL = case_when( SITE == "A" ~ "A", SITE == "B" ~ "B", SITE == "C" ~ "C", SITE
== "D" ~ "D" ) %>% as.factor() ) But what I get in the end is Warning message: In Ops.factor(SITE == "A") : '==' not meaningful for factors I want to create these levels. I can do it with a loop, but is there a way to do it with dplyr? A: We need another comparison because we want to return a different factor based on another vector. In base R, we could do df$NEW_COL % mutate( NEW_COL

The veteran tight end will now miss his second consecutive game after a slow recovery from a bone spur procedure in his hip last weekend. In his place, second-year player Chad Hansen will dress and play, as he did on Sunday. Hansen could also see additional work as the Cardinals went with only two tight ends. Brown was injured in the second quarter of the Cardinals' loss to the Seahawks and finished the game on the injury report. He was held out of practice on Wednesday and Thursday. Original story: Wireley Brown will start at tight end for the Arizona Cardinals in their game against the Seattle Seahawks on Sunday. Brown was a healthy scratch in the Cardinals' loss to the Green Bay Packers last weekend. Brown will join the team this week and is expected to be available as a part-time slot receiver.
