“With ‘HyperMotion Technology,’ the game becomes the best of real-life football within the FIFA experience,” said Tim Beibe, Senior Producer, FIFA. “It delivers a new level of ball control and pacing in an incredibly responsive game experience.” The motion capture data from the full pitch come from professional players and elite academy prospects, collected by motion tracking specialists with the long-standing partnership between EA Sports and Performive Motion. This is the best motion data EA Sports has ever captured to date and is a significant enhancement to the game. “With the introduction of ‘HyperMotion Technology,’ we’re able to combine a phenomenal new set of data from professional players and elite academy prospects with the incredible gameplay experience found in all of FIFA,” said Mike Gallagher, FIFA Lead Producer. “It enables us to deliver the most authentic performance and feel for football.” The new motion capture data gives a new level of responsiveness to the ball, ball speed, ball control, movement and mobility – an immersion that is unique in sports games. The player movement data has been tuned to give the ball a perfect weight and response in the air with the players acting, reacting and reacting to the ball with precision and accuracy. “We used the new FIFA data for test and validation purposes and, for the first time ever, we were able to visually render the game on PlayStation 4 with almost flawless controls, in comparison to other platforms,” said Cris Velasco, Technical Director at EA Canada. In addition to the hyper-responsive gameplay, several other FIFA improvements include: Pitch The pitch has been completely rebuilt using the latest FIFA technology, including a new hand-mapped surface that provides more realistic ball flight, improved lighting, better face-offs and more accurate ball physics. Additional: FIFA Ultimate Team: Players now return to their original transfers following changes in the transfer market. This was not the case in FIFA 20. FIFA Ultimate Team cards are now produced in FIFA 21 packs and will not be handed out in packs of Fifa 22 Cracked 2022 Latest Version. Social Team Moments: Players will now experience the true emotional moments they share together with their friends on social team moments. Player Positioning: The system will now reward players for positioning correctly during match actions, such as tackling or shooting
