The game is based on a mixture of genres, like traditional roguelikes, tactical party-based RPG (or CRPG), management/base-building RPG and even a touch of action-RPG by its format, pace and art. Why choose real-time combat instead of turn-based combat? Because it tries to offer the best of both worlds: fast combat and precision in controls. Generally speaking, real-time combat allows for much faster gameplay and a greater sense of action but usually makes the party more difficult to control compared to turn-based combat. Our game uses an instant-action system on pause (There's no pre-casting timer) that gives a similar level of control over spells and skills as in turn-based RPG. By using instant-actions and bonus actions at key moments on pause, your party can chain a series of precisely controlled measures through various characters or their bonus actions that can turn the tide of the battle instantly.

StoryThe underground empire mined and used powerful magic crystals to create abominations and crazy experiments which all backfired dramatically. The empire has now fallen and lies in chaos and disarray. As you discover the various apocalypses caused by the Mad Empire, will you be able to rescue the surviving citizens trapped in the locked-down underground? Can you even save yourself?

Deep Tactical ExperienceParty management, real-time combat with instant-action on pause, cover, flanking, terrain, surface effects (like fire, water, ice, oil, poison, acid, etc.), positioning, tons of usable items with contextual effects, lots of statuses affecting creatures, magic items with special mechanics (and more), all leading to emerging gameplay and a rich, non-repetitive, dramatic and intense experience. Crazy Magic Items In its madness, the empire also used the crystals to create a whole class of absurd and cursed magic items. Those items are usually very powerful and bizarre. For instance, the effect of Brittle Daemon that transforms your base damage to fire, gives you +2 damage, 2 Ignite charges and 1 Fireball Charge, Immunity to Fire but weakness to cold, -10 to defense and sets you on fire (Yes you will set oil surfaces ablaze if you walk over them inadvertently). This helps give personality to your characters and adds to replayability and emerging gameplay. Resource Management Over the course of a mission, manage your spell charges, hunger, thirst, health, injuries, instability and consumables (potions, scrolls, food, drinks, etc.).
