Total War Warhammer Gemfx

in an interview with gamestm, creative assembly ceo michael capps stated that one of the reasons why he chose to partner with games workshop was because of their strict ip protection and that they plan to follow suit with all their upcoming games. it is clear that creative assembly values warhammer as much as i do. i think we both want a new total war game that fits the warhammer universe. i think that total war is one of the greatest strategy franchises in video game history and i hope that, in bringing the warhammer ip back into the fold, we will see a new generation of games that will simply blow our minds. in my opinion, warhammer: total war is the first step in that direction. the lack of any real discernible plot in the campaign tells you this is no traditional total war game. in a very real sense, warhammer: total war is more of a total war-like game than a total war game. a warhammer: total war game in the form of the classic total war formula would require a story driven campaign. warhammer: total war is a standalone game, and one that is structured entirely around combat. its true character as a warhammer strategy game is the emphasis on conquest, combat, and the ability to focus on each of these aspects of warfare. its in this context that we can truly appreciate the faction and customization system in warhammer: total war. this is a war game, first and foremost, and it is that which makes warhammer: total war a fascinating title for me. ive been anticipating the release of warhammer: total war for a very long time now. in the last 2 years, ive heard many utterances of doom regarding this project, especially from those who felt that the warhammer ip was a difficult ip to develop games with. much of this fear has been unfounded, as creative assemblys warhammer project is delivering on the promise of what the ip is and should be. i hope that the success of warhammer: total war will not only help them continue to develop games like this, but will also encourage them to continue to partner with games workshop in the future. i could certainly see warhammer: total war as the next big franchise for creative assembly. when i can, i plan to play more games like this, but for now, i will be finding ways to get in on the ground floor of warhammer: total war. its the closest weve come to a total war game in the warhammer universe for a very long time, and i cant wait to see what it delivers. 5ec8ef588b
